 Vanka was a little boy of nine who, three months before, had travelled from the country side to be apprentice to Aliakin; the shoe maker, many many miles away in Moscow. On Christmas Eve he did not go to bed. He waited until his master had gone out to church, and then fetched a bottle of ink and a rusty pen from his master's cupboard, spread out a crumbled sheet of paper before him, and began to write. As he wrote, more than once he looked fearfully round at the door.
 "Dear grandpa," he wrote, "I am writing you a letter. I wish you a merry Christmas and I hope God will give you all sorts of good things. You know I have no papa or mamma, and you are all I have."
